Putting up his Duke's

Regarding your article on how homemade mayo stacks up against store-bought ("Hold the Mayo—and Don't Let Go!," July 23): I have one more to add to the list: Duke's Mayonnaise. I have found over 30 years that this mayo is better than homemade, and better than the other brands. The taste is fresh, not sweet, and not too lemony. Their Web site is dukemayo.com. I think once you try it, you may have a second article to write.

Farm stand favs

It was so nice to read your article on the farm stands. I've known Mary Sue [Didier] for years, and loved bringing my daughter to the stand for Halloween, and to buy our fresh produce. I still go there once a week.

Puzzling over wine

The crossword puzzle (Uncorked, "Turning Wine into a Game," Aug. 13) was fun. Please do more of them. Was able to solve 31 of the 40. Now who would know "zork," for wine's sake?

John Cordaro Downers Grove

That was fun! ("Turning Wine Into a Game") Good thing I just read Karen MacNeil's "The Wine Bible." Some stumpers, though (Xarello?). So much to know about wine it's dizzying.

A Field's favorite

This morning when I read the Tribune and found that Kathy Finn of Evanston had submitted the Marshall Field's lemon pasta salad ("What's Your Dish?" Aug. 13), I got excited. Field's had a number of salads that I loved to get for lunch when I worked in the Loop. The lemon pasta salad was one of my favorites. I was never able to recreate the salad, but now I can. Please send my thanks to Kathy Finn.
